It seems that history doesn't follow the ground. It ebbs and wanes with the times (or against). With these cycles we have those that live it and they come in all flavors, right, left, middle, radical, conservation...etc. We certainly have a lot of one-issue worriers. The problem is who really knows the guts of an issue, if you barely know the facts? Clarity comes at a steep price and whoever is willing to pay the price is usually the one keeping the secret. I only hope that we come to our senses and kill the two-party system once-and-for-all. We live in an age where information is constantly bombarding us with point and counterpoints, opinion, and opinion disguised as fact. It comes on our phones, in our cars, our homes, and pretty much everywhere else you stop for more than a minute. If you think about it, it's all a giant commercial, each side trying to get people to buy their "product" their "Brand". Some of what's in here addresses that...everything else is just entertainment.
