Dalmatia, which was my first love in the Balkans, and through which I learnt to know her sister lands, Bosnia and the Herzegovina. They are three twin sisters of almost equal though varied charms; and when you are privileged to know one, it follows as a natural consequence that you wish to know all three. Nature, I think, never intended them to be separated, for the inland countries need the outlet to the sea, and the coast land needs the supplies of the back country. From the purely esthetic point of view even they supply each others deficiencies Bosnia has the primeval forests, Herzegovina the grandest mountain scenery, Dalmatia the sunny shore and island-studded coast.
