A half Black, half Chinese dragon shifter bumps into a dragon hunter at a bar. Sparks fly as feelings of rage dissolve into something more positive and pure. Will the dragon receive what he once lost again? Or will he be the one standing in the way of his own happy ever after?

"Like the view?"

I blushed, blushing wasn't something I was accustomed to, "Yes... it's an ok view."

Diesel's hands cupped my face, and I placed my hands upon his chest. I allowed my magic to flow against his chest and heal him. Hunters were good at wielding magic to fight, but when it came to healing, they obviously sucked.

"Don't think... that," I was losing my words.

He drew me into a kiss that made my skin melt. His stubble was just right. Diesel's angular jaw line and chin dimple was too much to take in at one time. My hands traced his older scars.

I broke the kiss, what the heck was I doing?

"No, I can't... I just-"

"Just what? What do you have to lose?"

I bit my lip.

"A lot, now. I'd rather have nothing than have a little and lose it all."

I tried to get away, but his big arms kept me locked in his grasp. Diesel inhaled sharply and planted a kiss on my head.

"I won't let that happen," he whispered against my ear.

My dragon said he was telling the truth, but the pain that was embedded in me said differently.
