A no-strings fling is what she wants...but is that what she needs?

At 22, Gail's losing her mom to cancer...with only a week to live. Every second of every minute, Gail hopes the doctors are wrong. Then she loses the bracelet her mother gave her. On the edge, she jumps into the pool to find it. Something grabs her waist and flips her over in the water. It's Scott, the neighbors' gardener, trying to save her.

The sight of Scott's wet t-shirt plastered against the rippling muscles of his shoulders and chest gets Gail fantasizing about this Adonis. It's easier to get lost in a fantasy of raw passion than hope for anything at all.

With more regrets than he can ever hope to live with...Scott's trying to get his life together. The last thing he needs is a crazy rich girl who keeps throwing herself at him. But he knows something's wrong from the sad, lost look in her beautiful eyes.

Is this relationship finished before it ever truly begins? Or in their darkest moment... can Gail and Scott give each other hope?
