I always find very exciting the beginning of a book, even ones I've read, maybe because I always feel a sense of comfort here. Through this story, I can finally use my creativity. What I want to describe you, as the protagonists has really existing in the reality, perhaps the history I had to adapt this legible and understandable work to write right even to those people doesn't understand anything about love. When he told me about his love past, I've listened to him for months and while he was telling me his story, I realized more and more how nice it would be to put it all down in a book. However, I found the thought very interesting, as well fascinating. The reason that neither pressed me to write, is that there were no killers nor killed, and this gave me a sense of relief. While I was preparing the interview, Antonino's story made me realize that I would have needed to improve it through my narrator's ambition.
