A Defense Logistics Agency (DLA) study used to support the decision to close the Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Defense Contract Administrative Services (DCAS) region and to reassign its mission primarily to the Atlanta, Georgia, region was reviewed. GAO was asked to review two specific issues affecting the DLA estimate of civilian personnel savings: (1) the support now being provided by the Defense Personnel Support Center in Philadelphia and the possibility that this support could result in greater savings in Philadelphia than in Atlanta, and (2) the appropriateness of using an average salary rate to compute civilian salary savings. It was also asked to review the DLS estimates of recurring facility and space savings that would occur when the Philadelphia and Atlanta region headquarters vacated their present locations and one-time costs that would be needed to make space available for each region headquarters in its new location. This realignment is part of a larger DLA realignment consolidating the present nine DCAS regions into five. DLA decided that locating the Southeast region headquarters in Atlanta instead of Philadelphia would be more cost effective because one-time costs would be $136,934 less and recurring annual savings would be $8,694 greater. The Philadelphia headquarters has more personnel than Atlanta and is colocated with the Defense Personnel Support Center which provides a significant amount of support to the Philadelphia region. Implementation is scheduled to begin in April 1980 and to be completed by October 1981.
