Twist of Fate Kathryn Elizabeth Kelly

Falling through a rip in time, Erika Becquerel is torn from her life in the twenty-first century to 1837 where she is mistaken for Charles Becquerel's distant cousin. Erika is desperate to return to her own time in order to save her grandfather's life, yet she finds herself falling in love with Charles, heir to a sprawling cotton plantation.

In 1714 a Natchez Indian chief put a spell on Erika's grandmother which saved her life by creating a rip in time and propelling her into another time. As the Indian chief predicted, some residual effects of the spell fall upon not only the grandmother, but also Erika. As a result, Erika, without warning, falls through that rip in time to 1837 while visiting her grandfather. Charles Becquerel had agreed to marry his father's choice in order to acquire a valuable piece of land. When Erika first appears, Charles mistakes Erika for his cousin, Sierra. As Erika's mistaken identity is sorted out, Charles quickly becomes opposed to the arranged betrothal.

"What's going on?" she asked, leaning over the banister, one bare foot dropping over the edge of the step.

"I think you better go on back up, Miss. It wouldn't be proper for you to be seen dressed like this."

The valet had no more finished speaking when, as though in response to his words, the music drifted away in mid-strain and the whispering became louder. The violin bows grew still and the soft flute became silent. The dance room seemed to have frozen and there were entirely too many eyes turned in her direction.

Erika scanned the room of faces - faces she had never seen before. Several pale skinned women stared at her from behind their open fans and others from behind crystal goblets poised at their lips. A couple of men blew cigar smoke into the air as they watched her.

"Who is she?"

Their whispered words, spoken by voices unchecked, drifted clearly to Erika's ears.

"Hardly dressed at all."

"A man's shirt."

"Of all the nerve."

"You'd expect this kind of thing under the hill, but how did that trollop get in here?"

What were they talking about? Her eyes paused on a man in the back of the room whose face stood out from the others. His eyes locked with hers across the crowded room. She inhaled sharply.

It was him! It was the man she had seen riding up on the black horse - the man in the portrait hanging in the parlor.

Once again he was staring at her with that intensity that made her hands quiver. The passion in his gaze frightened her. His eyes slowly caressed her body down to her bare feet and slid back up to imprison her eyes.

He weaved his way across the ballroom, then started up the stairs.

He spoke. But she couldn't make out his words.
