Do you want to be able to walk into a room of strangers and instantly befriend everyone?

How do some people end up with friends anywhere they go and make amazing impressions on everyone?

What really makes people connect, open up, and just...click with others?

It's something we never learn in school...a shame because connecting instantly with others just might be the most important skill you'll ever learn.

The first minute of an interaction is the gatekeeper of friendship and relationships.

It determines whether people will invest time and energy in you...and simply care about you. Nail it, and you'll be given the benefit of the doubt in any situation.... Fail to click instantly, and you'll fall into the dreaded zone of apathy and "who cares about them?" We don't get second chances in a reality that deals largely in snap judgments.

Connect Instantly was written specifically to deal with those crucial first moments of interaction and make sure that you control 100 percent that you click and make a great impression and reap the rewards of it.
