Except from book:

Here's a list of the equipment required to take clones:

- a mother plant;
- a very sharp knife or a razor blade;
- pots and seed compost or better still an aeroponic system;
- cloning gel or rooting gel;
- disinfectant;
- glass of water;
- hand mister/spray bottle.

The procedure is similar to a surgical operation.

Failure to disinfect or use rooting gel will cost you as a lot of the clones will die; what's more there is a risk of disease spreading to the other clones.

Make sure the knife or razor blade is sterilized; there's a real risk of disease infecting the clones.

Look for growing tips on your mother plant. Tips near the top will take longer to root than those near the bottom as there are more rooting hormones towards the base of the plant. If growing a sea of green method, (perpetual harvest using two rooms) then tips from the top of the mother plant will tend to flower more quickly once the roots are formed.

Take a cutting around five inches in length, so five inches down from the tip take a 45 degree cut with your knife or razor blade.

Immediately place this in the glass of water. This prevents air bubbles entering the cut.

Growing cannabis has never been easier, with advances in technology and new strains of auto-flowering cannabis emerging.
