Star Crossed Lovers Christine Tanner

Frances was searching for an Arabian prince, a man who could calm her down from the wild child she had been to a married woman who searched for only love. Seeking out the man via an online meeting place, she found Mostafa, her Egyptian man, and prince in waiting. They met and the sparks flew immediately. Within two months they were married and working on a life together.

Until one day, he came home and informed her he was going back to the Middle East. He had not told her and she felt he was hiding something about the trip.

"Star Crossed Lovers" follows them from the beginning of their tremendous relationship and how they were never apart for over two years to a time when they had to be apart for a month or more. The trip was not one that either of them were too sure he would make it back from easily. How would they handle this separation?

Could he go overseas and get out of a country that had a ton of activity going on with the uprising of rebels battling a government? Or would he get over to the country he was part of only to find that he would be stuck there for longer then either of them had thought at first?

Better yet could their relationship get past this one secret, or were there more that were hidden beneath the surface that Frances would discover after he left?
